LATEST TECHNOLOGY

ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE IN MECHANICAL ENGINEERING

Artificial Intelligence is at the core of the Industry 4.0 revolution. Artificial Intelligence algorithms can optimize production floors, manufacturing supply chains, predict plant/unit failures, and much more. For instance, in 2018, Artificial Intelligence helped in reducing supply chain forecasting errors. Moreover, using Machine Learning based quality testing is increasing defect detection rates by 90%.

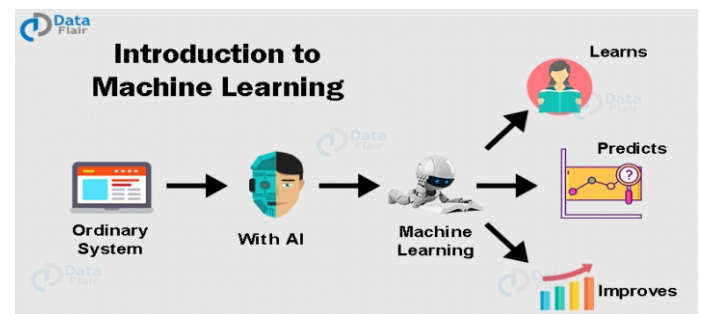

Artificial Intelligence in Mechanical Engineering

In the near future, most human-intensive tasks will be accomplished by machines. Therefore, it becomes essential for mechanical engineers to up-skill themselves and gets acquainted with the technology.

Applications of AI and ML in Manufacturing

Manufacturers are always keen to adopt technology that improves product quality, reduces time-to-market, and is scalable across their units. Artificial Intelligence, Machine Learning, and Robotic Process Automation are helping manufacturers fine-tune product quality and optimize operation. These are the 3 most common applications of Artificial Intelligence and Machine Learning.

Predicting mechanical failure

Predicting mechanical failure is also beneficial for industries like the airline industry. Airlines need to be extremely efficient in operations and delays of even a few minutes can result in heavy penalties. Situations like delay in taxing will result in severe fines for airlines, the primary reason for taxing delays results from airplanes experiencing mechanical failures or environmental situations that result in cascading delays. This is directly related to sequential data. For making sense of sequential data, we can use machine learning models to predict such events. By continuously monitoring data (power plant, manufacturing unit operations) and providing them to smart decision support systems, manufacturers can predict the probability of failure. Predictive maintenance is an emerging field in industrial applications that helps in determining the condition of in-service equipment to estimate the optimum time of maintenance. ML-based predictive maintenance saves cost and time on routine or preventive maintenance

AI for automatically segmenting brain tumors

Artificial Intelligence has a broad scope in healthcare devices and applications. It can make analysis, treatment, and monitoring of tumors more effective. For example, NVIDIA has developed a 3D MRI brain tumor segmentation using deep-learning and 3D magnetic resonance imaging technologies. "Automated segmentation of 3D brain tumors can save physicians time and provide an accurate reproducible solution for further tumor analysis and monitoring."

Reducing test and Calibration time

Data science-based analytics can help manufacturers with the prediction of calibration and test results to reduce the testing time while production. For example – Bosch, a German multinational engineering and technology company used Artificial Intelligence techniques like early prediction from process parameters, descriptive analytics for root-cause analysis, and component failures prediction to avoid unscheduled machine downtime and achieved 35% reduction in test and calibration time.

Students who are trained in mechanical engineering and have an understanding of Machine Learning are valued in companies across the world. These are students - employees who do not need to be trained to understand the intricacies of a Navier-stokes equation nor will they need to be given a crash course in supervised and unsupervised learning. The demand for such students is always high, and meet the grueling demands of the industry.

ROBOTIC PROCESS AUTOMATION (RPA)

Robotic Process Automation is basically the idea that 'Anything that can be automated, should be automated'. RPA is the use of software bots to automate highly repetitive, routine tasks normally performed by knowledge workers. Automating repetitive tasks saves time and money. Robotic process automation bots expand the value of an automation platform by completing tasks faster, allowing employees to perform higher-value work.

Like AI and Machine Learning, Robotic Automation Process or RPA, is another technology that is automating jobs. RPA is the use of software to automate business processes such as interpreting applications, processing transactions, dealing with data, and even replying to emails. RPA automates repetitive tasks that people used to do.

Although Forrester Research estimates RPA automation will threaten the livelihood of 230 million or more knowledge workers, or approximately 9 percent of the global workforce, RPA is also creating new jobs while altering existing jobs. McKinsey finds that less than 5 percent of occupations can be totally automated but about 60 percent can be partially automated.

In traditional workflow automation tools, a software developer produces a list of actions to automate a task and interface to the back-end system using internal application programming interfaces (APIs) or dedicated scripting language. In contrast, RPA systems develop the action list by watching the user perform that task in the application's graphical user interface (GUI), and then perform the automation by repeating those tasks directly in the GUI. This can lower the barrier to use of automation in products that might not otherwise feature APIs for this purpose. RPA tools have strong technical similarities to graphical user interface testing tools. These tools also automate interactions with the GUI, and often do so by repeating a set of demonstration actions performed by a user. RPA tools differ from such systems in that they allow data to be handled in and between multiple applications, for instance, receiving email containing an invoice, extracting the data, and then typing that into a book keeping system.

LATEST TECHNOLOGY

NUEROSCIENCE

The study of the human brain is, obviously, the most complicated area of research. When we enter a discussion on this topic, the works of JOSE DELGADO need to be mentioned. Much of the work taking place at the NIH, Stanford and elsewhere is built on research done in the 1950s, notably that of Yale physiologist Jose Delgado, who implanted electrodes in animal brains and attached them to a "stimoceiver" under the skull. This device transmitted radio signals through the electrodes in a technique called electronic stimulation of the brain, or ESB, and culminated in a now-legendary photograph, in the early 1960s, of Delgado controlling a live bull with an electronic monitor

According to Delgado, "One of the possibilities with brain transmitters is to influence people so that they conform to the political system. Autonomic and somatic functions, individual and social behavior, emotional and mental reactions may be invoked, maintained, modified, or inhibited, both in animals and in man, by stimulation of specific cerebral structures. Physical control of many brain functions is a demonstrated fact. It is even possible to follow intentions, the development of thought and visual experiences."

Neuroscience," wrote author Tom Wolfe in Forbes magazine a couple years ago, "is on the threshold of a unified theory that will have an impact as powerful as that of Darwinism a hundred years ago." Wolfe is wowed by the combination of powerful imaging and tracking technologies that now allow scientists not only to watch the brain "as it functions"-- not only to identify centers of sensation "lighting up" in response to stimuli, but to track a thought as it proceeds along neural pathways and traverses the brainscape on its way to the great cerebral memory bank, where it queues up for short- or long-term storage. Now that you know what condition your condition is in, you know that such devices are only a stopgap measure at best in the evolutionary story. The implants you get may enhance your capabilities, but they will expire when you do, leaving the next generation unchanged.

As we become more dependent on biotechnology, the standards of what is "alive" will be up for grabs. Take a look at The Tissue Culture and Art Project's semi living worry dolls, cultured in a bioreactor by growing living cells on artificial scaffolds, or the Pig Wings project, which explores if pigs could fly.

Deciding who or what, exactly, is human will be an incendiary issue in the years to come as our genetic engineering technologies progress and we go beyond implantables to actual germ-line genetic modification. We are already creating chimerical creatures by combining genes from different species. We will try to engineer improved human beings--not because we're so concerned about the intelligent machine life we are creating, but because we're human, and it's embedded in our nature to explore, tinker, and create. It will be several years before we see a practical application of the technology we've discussed. Let's hope such technologies will be used for restoring the prosperity and peace of the world and not to give the world a devastating end.

LATEST TECHNOLOGY

MOBILE EDGE COMPUTING

Tech analysts believe that mobile edge computing will transform the telecom industry in 2021 as a disruptive technology. The telecom companies will leverage edge computing to bring data storage and computing closer to the end-users' devices. In addition to reducing latency, edge computing will speed up the processing of real-time data collected and transmitted through connected devices. Many telecom companies are expected to diversify resources to mobile edge computing from a public cloud to store data locally.

EDGE COMPUTING IN FAVOUR OF A CENTRAL CLOUD

The rise of new ways of working has caused a massive shift in networking requirements. Businesses that were well on their path to digital transformation have also had to struggle with the new reality of remote everything. Old but potent issues such as cybersecurity have resurfaced as organizations face a barrage of data being created from multiple operations conducted online. In the light of these events, AI can't just be in a data center, it needs to be at the site. From here arises the greatest trend of 2021, the requirement of highly private 5G networks enabling strengthened cyber security and effective remote operations. According to Forrester, businesses will be in favour of spending on edge computing rather than a public cloud in 2021.

Top 5 Benefits of Edge Computing

1. Speed and Latency - Edge computing reduces the overall traffic loads of your enterprise at large, which improves performance for all of your enterprise applications and services.
2. Security - When data is analyzed locally, it remains protected by the security blanket of the on premise enterprise. Edge computing also helps companies overcome the issues of local compliance and privacy regulations as well as the issue of data sovereignty.
3. Cost Savings - Edge computing allows you to categorize your data from a management perspective. By retaining as much data within your edge locations, you reduce the need for costly bandwidth to connect all of your locations, and bandwidth translates directly into dollars.
4. Greater Reliability - The world of IoT includes some pretty remote territories comprised of rural and less than optimal environments concerning internet connectivity. When edge devices can locally store and process ensuing data, it improves reliability.
5. Scalability - Although the idea that edge computing offers an advantage of scalability may seem contrary to promoted theory, it actually makes sense. Expanding or even just modifying dedicated datacenters is an expensive proposition.

SOLAR PAINT

Renewable energy is more in demand than ever as individuals, concerned about increasing consumption of fossil fuels and the potential impact of on climate change, look for ways to cut back on carbon-producing energy sources. Now, researchers have developed a new way of creating solar panels that may make it easier to install than ever before – a crystal-based liquid that has allowed researchers to effectively paint on solar panels to suitable surfaces. Traditional silicon-based solar panels use photo-voltaic crystals arranged on thin, brittle panels to collect sunlight and convert it into energy. These panels are typically rigid, limiting transportability and making installation a more involved process. Despite drops in cost over the past few years solar adoption across the US has been slow, leading researchers for look to ways to make solar cheaper and more convenient to install. One possibility that scientists have investigated have been silicon-free materials that use alternatives to photovoltaic crystals that can be melted down into a kind of solar paint that can be applied to surfaces to create an instant solar panel.

Now, scientists have identified a few different ways to make solar paint work. One method, developed by researchers at the National Renewable Energy Laboratory, uses special perovskite crystals to create a liquid equivalent to solar panels that can be sprayed or painted on to just about any suitable surface. Another method, developed by researchers at the University of Kansas and Beijing Jiaotong University, uses atomically thin semiconductors coupled with organic materials to similarly form semiconducting crystals as the material dries. In both cases, once the liquid has fully dried, the crystals allow the surface they were painted on to act similarly to a silicon-based solar panel – collecting sunlight and converting it into usable energy. Both versions of the solar paint could be used to rapidly add solar power production to a roof or unused wall – or they could be sprayed onto a panel of paper or other thin material to create a solar panel that can be easily rolled up and moved from place to place. Recently the professors from the research team at RMIT University who have developed the hydrogen-extracting solar paint. It contains a newly developed substance, synthetic molybdenum-sulphide. Absorbing moisture from the air, it works similarly to silica gel, which you've undoubtedly seen packaged with consumer products in order to keep them dry. This solar paint also contains titanium oxide, a substance already present in conventional paint. The titanium oxide helps the paint use solar energy to break down the absorbed moisture into hydrogen and oxygen particles. The hydrogen can then be used to produce clean energy.

COVID - 19

Coronavirus disease (COVID-19) is an infectious disease caused by a newly discovered coronavirus. Most people infected with the COVID-19 virus will experience mild to moderate respiratory illness and recover without requiring special treatment. Older people, and those with underlying medical problems like cardiovascular disease, diabetes, chronic respiratory disease, and cancer are more likely to develop serious illness. The best way to prevent and slow down transmission is to be well informed about the COVID-19 virus, the disease it causes and how it spreads. Protect yourself and others from infection by washing your hands or using an alcohol based rub frequently and not touching your face. The COVID-19 virus spreads primarily through droplets of saliva or discharge from the nose when an infected person coughs or sneezes, so it's important that you also practice respiratory etiquette (for example, by coughing into a flexed elbow).

PREVENTION

To prevent infection and to slow transmission of COVID-19, do the following:

- Wash your hands regularly with soap and water, or clean them with alcohol-based hand rub.
- Maintain at least 1 metre distance between you and people coughing or sneezing.
- Avoid touching your face.
- Cover your mouth and nose when coughing or sneezing.
- Stay home if you feel unwell.
- Refrain from smoking and other activities that weaken the lungs.
- Practice physical distancing by avoiding unnecessary travel and staying away from large groups of people.

A SPECIAL THANKS

"Thank you for all that you're doing. You are sacrificing so much to save people's lives and to maintain normalcy. Because of your efforts, I can trust that my family, friends and neighbors will stay safe during this unprecedented crisis. That's why you are the heroes of this generation."
